Our "determination" would not sent the application process back to square one.

A provisional license was issued on January 5 in conjunction with asking the licensee if they wanted to request a hearing (CDPHE should have asked the public at this point if anyone wanted a hearing). When the licensee did not request an hearing, the State issued the final license on March 7. As far as Dennis and I know, the license is still in good standing (see below).

Since the March action, the only action posted on the Colorado web site is the delay in financial assurance. The link below it their press release on the delay. http://www.cdphe.state.co.us/release/2011/082311.pdf

The license issuance and other related documents are at the Pinon Ridge portion of the Colorado web site at: http://www.cdphe.state.co.us/hm/rad/rml/energyfuels/decision/index.htm

OK, this raises a question though – could it send the application process "back to square one"? That implies negating the license. Our Comm Plan says a final license was issued March 7, 2011, (this story says Jan 5, date of the preliminary license).

I talked to the Grand Junction Daily Sentinel reporter, and he and I were both confused about the status of the CO license of Pinon Ridge.

Sheep Mountain Alliance filed the initial lawsuit. The CI who released his letter is their attorney.
