CodeRed System Tested in IPEC EPZ

Today, Rockland, Orange and Putnam counties, working with Entergy, tested a high-speed telephone alerting system. The counties selected call areas within the Indian point 10-mile EPZ that simulated siren failures. The counties will evaluate the results of today's test to determine the system's effectiveness and its possible addition to their existing public alert and warning systems.

CodeRed is a reverse 911 service that employs an internet mapping utility to geographically target calls to a select area. The system is controlled via secure internet portal where officials can choose where to direct the calls as well as record a message that will be relayed. The system is widely used for weather emergencies in the South and is in place as part of the alert and notification system at Vermont Yankee.

During the test, residences and businesses within each county received a pre-recorded phone call that tested the capabilities of the high-speed call system.
