Stacy,

I think that your reply answered my question. I will plan to set up a conference room on my end so that multiple people can participate with just the one bridgeline. If anyone determines that they will need to call in separately, I will inform them that they need to contact you to ensure there are enough lines for the call.

Please let me know if my approach will be acceptable.

Thank you for your time and assistance.

Regards,
Kevin

Kevin,

Thanks for question. In order to ensure that I have enough bridge lines available, I would appreciate if each caller contacted me directly for the bridge line information (as there are not an unlimited number of bridge lines for this call). It doesn't matter if there are numerous participants on each line (I don't need to know every participant ahead of time), but I do need to control the number of separate calls being made so that I can ensure everyone in the public has the opportunity to participate. If I know ahead of time that there will be many different numbers dialing in, I can request more lines for the call.

I hope that answers your question.

Thank you,
Stacy

Ms. Joseph,

Thank you for the reply. I do have one question. I believe there will be additional individuals (potentially 3-5) from my company who may be interested in participating in this meeting pending their schedule availability. Will there be an issue if I forward the bridgeline information to them or will they need to contact you directly?

Regards,
Kevin
